BBQ Safety - the dangers of Carbon Monoxide

There have been a number of tragic deaths nationally from carbon monoxide poisoning linked to the use of barbecues within tents, camping structures and caravans.

- Carbon Monoxide (CO) is a colourless, odourless, tasteless poisonous gas produced by incomplete burning of carbon-based fuels, including gas, oil, wood and coal.
- Levels of the gas can build up very quickly to levels that can make someone unwell or result in a fatality.
- Approximately 4,000 people attending Accident and Emergency each year are diagnosed with carbon monoxide poisoning.

- When CO enters the body, it prevents the blood from bringing oxygen to cells, tissues and organs. It can cause symptoms such as headaches, drowsiness, nausea and vomiting.
- CO can kill quickly, in minutes, without warning and even low levels of the poison can cause lasting damage to health.
- Campers have lost their lives after taking lit barbecues into tents or caravans for warmth. A lit or smouldering barbecue should never be taken into a tent, tent awning, camping pod, caravan or campervan.
- Similarly portable gas stoves are not designed to be used inside such structures. They should be kept clean, in good working order and should only be used outside in a suitably ventilated area.
- It is tempting to move cooking equipment inside when the weather is poor, but this can quickly lead to a potentially deadly build-up of poisonous gas.
- Anyone who thinks they may have been exposed to carbon monoxide fumes should seek medical advice immediately.
- Throwing gas, aerosol or similar canisters/containers on to fires is extremely dangerous and will lead to eviction.
